PLANNING SHORT CUT FROM HOTEL TO KING

Plans have been projected by the Hawaiian Trust Company for the opening of a lane through the business block from Hotel street to King street, cutting out the extreme Wackiki end of the Arlington Hotel buildings.

Owing to the slant of the street, the hotel front will suffer less than the rear portion of the building. The store quarters occupied by the Singer Sewing Machine Company will be entirely cut away. The Bishop Estate is giving half the width of the lane, in order to make a wide roadway. The roadway runs in a straight line until the rear end of the Bulletin building property is reached, where there will be a jog to Ewa. The Bulletin building stands on Bishop Estate land, under lease to the Brewer Estate.

When the lane is cut through, warehouses for the Fort street business blocks will be erected adjoining the lane. Entrance to the warehouses can be gained by way of the lane, and eventually the trust company may extend the rear of the big buildings. This would include the Boston block.

The lane entrance at the rear of Benson, Smith's store will be closed, and probably the building extended to the Arlington Hotel block. Mr. Galt of the Hawaiian Trust expresses the hope that something may happen that all the buildings from Hotel street down to the Boston block may be razed and a new building erected—a building modern in every respect, with conveniences which the present old-time buildings do not possess.

The work of opening the lane will start in the near future.

WHEN A WOMAN WILL

"How much does that come to now?"

The speaker was a handsomely-gowned woman, who stood before the window of the head bookkeeper in a certain large department store.

"Twenty dollars, madam," politely replied the bookkeeper as he ran his eye down a list of items before him. "Anything else, madam?"

"Let me see," mused the woman. "I want $25. Just add $10 worth of handkerchiefs. That will be about right, will it not?"

"Entirely satisfactory, madam," returned the bookkeeper.

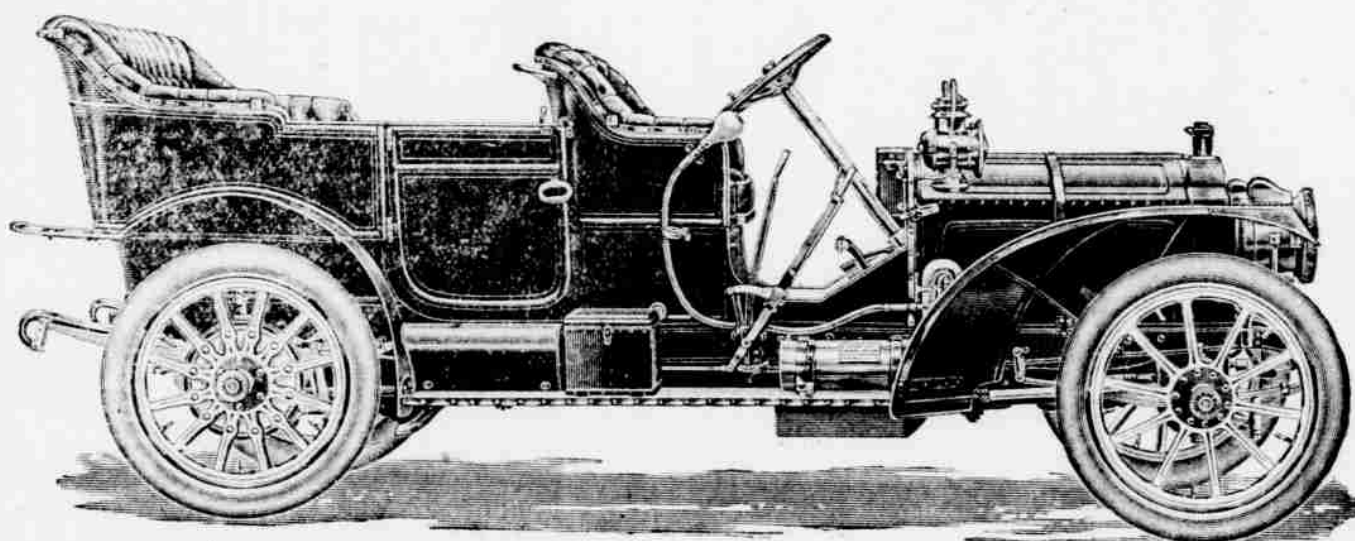

He opened his cash drawer and counted out $25. The woman placed it in her purse, nodded her thanks to the bookkeeper and went out to her automobile waiting at the curb.

"It does look like an odd sort of sale, doesn't it?" said the bookkeeper, with a smile, to a friend who had watched the transaction with curious eyes.

"Looks like I was paying her $25 for $30 worth of our own goods that she wanted to buy. This was the answer:

"That woman who just went out is the wife of a solid business man, who pays his bills monthly with the regularity of clockwork. He is worth half a million, and is the best of husbands, apparently, lavishing all manner of luxuries upon his wife, and allowing her to run up bills to any amount, which he pays without the slightest question and without looking at the items, merely asking her if they are all right. But he never gives her any cash money to spend as she sees fit without his knowledge of how and where it goes.

"This not only piques her pride, but sometimes places her in positions that are made most embarrassing for want of a few dollars in ready money. She is too proud to ask him for a cent, so she has hit upon this plan to get the cash. She comes down here, gives me a list of articles to put upon her bill, and gets from me cash to the amount of about 80 per cent of the value of the goods. The transaction sends her away happy and leaves us with our fair margin of profit on the deal. Oh, no, she is not the only one. It is quite common among our female customers whose husbands are 'good' but close with ready money."
